After earning a doctorate in physics from the University of Michigan, Kristin Lewis' career has taken her from industry to government to nonprofits. Effective communication skills have helped her at each stage of this journey, and now she works to help scientists develop their own communication skills at the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Join Lewis as she shares lessons learned in her varied career stages as well as opportunities to explore after your postdoc is over.

Be sure to bring your questions. Walk away with valuable career-building tips, lessons and skills that can advance your career development.

This series is a co-creation of the Office of Postdoc Affairs (OPA) and the FAU's Postdoc Association.*
