Bleed: Printers are not 100% perfect and consistent, and they can't print exactly to the edge of the paper. When color or an image extends to the very edge of the page, designers let it "bleed over" the edge, that is, they extend the image over the edge of the page so that when the image is trimmed to its final size, there's no unprinted edge remaining. The red edge is trimmed off.