To Celebrate Hispanic Heritage Month, the October PJHR Colloquium series focuses on political forces in Latin America. In her talk Dr. Nichols discusses the conditions that encourage female participation in rebellion with an emphasis on Latin American cases. Dr. Nichols argues that the determinants of women’s participation in conflict lie in the origins of rebel groups. Those that emerge from developed political organizations such as unions, political parties or ethno-religious groups are more likely to include women within their ranks than those that grow out of groups that were military in nature. This work not only has implications for the literature it engages, it also challenges one-dimensional understandings of Latin American Culture, particularly in regard to feminism.

Dr. Angela Nichols
Assistant Professor
Department of Political Science

Wednesday, October 11, 2017
2:00 PM – 3:00 PM

Location:
Boca Raton Campus
AH 52, Room 204

www.fau.edu/pjhr