The No. 2 Best Public Elementary School and the No. 11 Best private K-12 school is the topic of Edgar Schein. The invitation culminated in a full hour discussion of his research projects that generate insight into the challenges that families, parents, and school administrators face. One of the projects is a study on the education of Latino male faculty in higher education. This was a highly competitive grant award. The Review Committee was impressed with the clear articulation of the project's goals and the potential impact on the field.

This study is the first to provide research on peer-to-peer conversations in college students. This is important because it allows for a better understanding of the social dynamics and support systems within college communities.

Valerie Bristor, Ph.D., a member of the FAU High School faculty, is developing a new program called "Culturally Responsive Strategies for Early Education." This project aims to improve cultural competence and provide effective strategies for educators working with diverse populations.

Learn more about FAU High School and its award-winning projects.