Environmental Studies

Graduate Certificate

(Minimum of 12 credits required)

Program coordinator:

Stacey Balkan, Associate Professor, English & Environmental Humanities

The Graduate Certificate in Environmental Studies introduces students to the intersecting fields of Environmental and Climate Science, Environmental Humanities (inclusive of Literature, Languages, and Linguistics) and Environmental Social Science (inclusive of Political Science, Anthropology, Sociology, History, and Women, Gender, and Sexuality Studies). Careers in Environmental Journalism, Environmental Consulting, Climate Change Mitigation, and Postsecondary Education in Environmental Humanities and Environmental Studies require interdisciplinary study across the Humanities, Geosciences, and Social Sciences; and the expanding academic disciplines of Environmental and Energy Humanities, which recognize that our environmental dilemmas are fundamentally problems of ethics and political power, demand fluency in these expanding fields of study.

The graduate certificate in Environmental Studies provides an academic forum for understanding environmental issues in their historical and material contexts. Students may earn this certificate by completing 12 credits (four courses) in relevant disciplines.

Admission to this certificate program is open to students currently enrolled in graduate programs at Florida Atlantic University as well as to non-degree seeking students. For degree-seeking students, credits earned for graduate degree programs may also count for the certificate if approved by advisors in both programs. Applications for the Graduate Certificate should be submitted to the Coordinator of the Environmental Studies Certificate Program upon successful completion of the required courses with a minimum grade of "B" in each course.

Students may need permission to enroll in courses outside of their stipulated curriculum. Please check with your departmental graduate advisor as well as the departmental coordinator or instructor for the desired course.*

The following list of courses represents current and past course offerings in relevant departments. Please contact the program coordinator for current course offerings, or refer to FAU's Registration Portal.

ANG 6587: Seminar in Biological Anthropology

Why Interdisciplinary Environmental Studies?

The field is flourishing internationally, with new programs appearing almost weekly. The justification for Environmental Humanities, and the intersecting study of Environment and Society, is powerfully made by cultural critic Imre Szeman (University of Waterloo, Minister of Environment) and anthropologist Dominic Boyer (Rice University): “our energy and environmental dilemmas are fundamentally problems of ethics, habits, values, institutions, beliefs, and power—all areas of expertise of the humanities and humanistic social sciences” (2014).

Why Interdisciplinary Environmental Studies at FAU?

The university, aligned with the belated national consensus regarding climate science and the climate emergency, has designated several relevant disciplinary areas as part of its strategic “pillars” and “platforms” for its 2015-2025 strategic plan. These include: Environmental Science, a “Healthy and Environmentally Sustainable Campus,” and “Peace, Justice, and Human Rights.” The last has been channeled into a Certificate program for the Center for Peace, Justice, and Human Rights as well as the Undergraduate Minor in Environment and Society that we passed in Spring 2024 and which will already be awarded to four students in Fall 2024. The graduate certificate would allow for students in our M.A. and Ph.D. programs to pursue a similar course of study. Toward that end, one M.F.A. student and one Ph.D. student have already completed the requirements for this proposed certificate.

It also ought to be noted that a certificate in Environmental Studies had been created many years ago; perhaps because of the institutional climate, or inability to promote the program at the time, the certificate was not adequately supported and thus not successful. Given our ongoing collaborations within and across departments and disciplines—as is evidenced by the successful creation of our new minor, not to mention that all four of our new hires in the Department of English (unsurprisingly) include Environmental Humanities work in their scholarly pursuits and pedagogical practices—it is clear that this is the right time to get this certificate back on the books.

The strategic plan also stresses relevance and marketability: this course of study is, without question, amongst the most popular and marketable fields of study both nationally and internationally. Questions around energy consumption, and the “greening” of the “energy” sector, are surely central to any discussion pertaining to the nation’s economic (and political) well-being. Consequently, students are virtually guaranteed employment in, for example, Environmental Consulting, Climate Change Mitigation, and the (exponentially increasing) academic discipline of Environmental Humanities.

Not only do the available courses for next year (2024-2025) also speak to the viability of pursuing this field, it is also worth noting that I was approached by a representative from the National Academy of the Sciences—an engineer explicitly seeking a humanist—who is keen on FAU becoming an affiliate institution for the National Gulf Scholars Program, which seeks to cultivate new leaders in areas related to climate, energy, and sustainability. We are now at work on the application. (My colleagues at Rice are affiliate members as well, and we hope to cultivate a more concrete disciplinary and institutional relationship with them.)

Beyond FAU, as an Environmental Humanist and Environmental Justice worker, I work with a core group of international faculty (<https://www.petrocultures.com>) on similar programming; and several members of the Petrocultures community have constructed such degrees, which have been wildly successful. Quite a few of their students have also expressed interest in FAU’s Ph.D. program in Comparative Studies owing to the possibility of pursuing such interdisciplinary work.

Of course, as an Environmental Humanist in South Florida, which many have deemed “ground zero” for the climate crisis in the United States, I also feel that it is a moral imperative to bolster study in areas related to planetary habitability.

Are there peer institutions working on similar degrees?

There are many peer institutions working on similar degree and/or certificate programs: Michigan State University, UC Davis, the University of Oregon, University of Utah, Arizona State University, and many more—too many to list here. Notably, institutions like the University of Oregon and the University of Delaware (a very famous program) fall within the category of aspirational peer as we become an R1 institution in line with FAU100 as well as FAU’s strategic plan, both of which mandate that we work toward institutional inclusion in the nation’s top 100 public schools.

Are there models for academic scholarship that stress interdisciplinarity in a way that would benefit faculty teaching in this area and thus also serve FAU100 in terms of bolstering our research profile?

Amongst the many scholarly collectives within the academy, the Petrocultures Research Group and the After Oil school have been particularly successful in terms of publication on top university presses, securing funding for conference programs and residencies, and mentoring graduate students in the field. As an example, we boast two (soon to be three!) collaboratively authored Environmental Humanities/Environmental Studies volumes (published on top university presses—e.g., <https://www.upress.umn.edu/book-division/books/solarities>); and I have received several queries from international students regarding such an emphasis for study at the B.A., M.A., and Ph.D. level. It is perhaps also relevant that my own edited anthology, Oil Fictions: World Literature and our Contemporary Petrosphere, which is an interdisciplinary Energy Humanities project, has just received its 8th review in a top interdisciplinary journal; and scholarly series like WVU Press's "Energy and Society" along with similarly focused series at MIT, Fordham, Princeton, Duke, and Minnesota, are popping up everywhere.

Dear Stacy,

Thank you for involving our department in the Graduate Certificate in Environmental Studies. As the instructor of "ENV 6932: Sustainability and Pollution Prevention" which is included on your course list, and in my capacity as the Graduate Director of the Department of Civil, Environmental and Geomatics Engineering, I express our strong departmental support for this certificate program. I'm copying our Department Chair (Dr. Kaisar) and Dean Meeroff to keep them in the loop.

Please let me know if you need any additional information from us.

Best regards,

I write with the updated graduate certificate information and an updated web site.

Would you send a quick note of departmental support for the certificate? I know that I circulated everything last term, but we had to wait for administrative reasons and I am now updating all.

Thank you again for your support! I wish that I could take your class; indeed, I would love to see the syllabus.

Dear Stacey,

Apologies for the late response. Why are we limiting this to students already in our graduate programs? Often, certificates can be fulfilled by non-degree seeking students. There might be an audience out there for such students---who are already working in these fields (or hoping to), but who want some kind of "certificate" to make them more marketable. I'm not sure why we would want to restrict those who want to fulfill the certificate.

Also, I do think we're going to be better off if we are only listing courses that are in the catalog. (Many grad courses tend to have variable titles. As long as the prefix/number you list is still in use, I think it's fine. But if there are courses listed that are completely absent from the catalog, I don't think we should include them in the list. If there are new courses to be added, we could try to put them through the committees at the same time.)

Also...I can lend my support as Interim Chair of LLCL if you want/need it. LLCL supports the certificate.

Sincerely,

Dear Stacey,

I am delighted to support the proposal. I think it's crucial that WGSS remain a part of this Graduate Certificate, and the proposal looks great to me.

I'm not sure if Jane's course "Gender and Climate Change" is a graduate course, but I will certainly ask and let you know.

Please let me know if there's anything else you need from me!

Warmly,
Carla

Dear Carla,
I write as the Director of the soon to be resurrected Graduate Certificate in Environmental Studies to ask for your support as the new director of WGSS (woo-hoo!). Bill signed off last term, but we are moving forward this term. The certificate will be offered to graduate students across Arts and Letters and will include at least one WGSS course—Jane's is now on the site, and I "Gender and Climate Change" needs to be added (is this also a graduate offering?). I have updated the site; and attached are the proposal, rationale, and description.

Please let me know if there is anything else that you would like to add. If this is amenable to

Dear Evan,

Sorry to flood your inbox! I was given two days to get every original stakeholder's approval for two changes to the certificate in order for it to go through; two of our students are hoping to graduate.

Thanks for all your work on this, and incorporating the edits and suggestions. A yes from me!

Just an FYI, I will be traveling tomorrow for a conference and not back until early next week. If any decisions need to be made while I'm gone, please feel free to go ahead without my input.

Dear Environment and Society colleagues,

I write having just attended the College GPC committee where the proposal (for the Graduate Certificate in Environmental Studies) passed with pending revisions; and I now write to you for your approval of said revisions so that this can move forward to the next level (and I promised Art that I would get the revised proposal to him by Wednesday night if possible!). The College GPC graciously approved its passing pending one major curricular revision and a series of largely cosmetic revisions:

1. The certificate was initially drafted as requiring 15 credits per the original certificate program; the committee suggested 12 in line with other certificates in A&L (and owing to a variety of departmental curricular restrictions that will make 15 quite difficult). Will this body agree to a certificate after 12 credits (in line, for example, with the WGSS and Translation Studies certificate)? (It actually isn't clear why the original ES certificate was 15, and 12 certainly makes sense.)

Hi Stacey,

Yes, I support the changes you have suggested.

The changes make sense to me and lowering the credit hours to 12 may increase the number of students who will be able to earn a certificate.

Thank you for all of your work on making the grad certificate possible.

(It actually isn't clear why the original ES certificate was 15, and 12 certainly makes sense.)
2. The committee suggested moving any special topics courses into a separate category to clarify that they are not offered consistently. For example, the courses that I teach in CST and LIT vary every term; and all of them are relevant, but not always the same. Thus, I shall place CST7309 and LIT6934 in a separate category.
3. I also need to delete a few courses that are no longer taught--e.g., CST7309.

Thank you for your ongoing support, and please let me know your vote ASAP!
