Hello Chris,

The Department of Anthropology has no objection to the course. It can complement some of our offerings.

Hi Mike,

I am forwarding a proposed course by one of our faculty called Health Communication. We saw you all teach “Global Health and Culture” and want to make sure that there isn’t significant overlap. If not, I am asking for a letter of support that I can forward up the UUPC chain. I need to get this letter in early next week.

All the best,
Chris

Hi Pierre:

I am happy to review this proposal for Health Communication undergrad course.

Business Communications offers a similar course at master's level for the MHA program. As an undergraduate course, though, we have no objection. In fact, if Communication Studies would like to work collaboratively on this course, benefit may result for both colleges. For our undergraduate health administration students, the required course is GEB3213 which covers the critical thinking aspect through analysis of a business problem specific to the major including current industry challenges, trends and recommendations which poses some overlap.

The graduate course, GEB6217, includes patient/provider/administrator communications, organizational communications, problem analysis from operations, IT and technology, human resources, public relations, crisis management communications perspectives, as well as, verbatim and charting education.

Thanks.

Joe

Dear Pierre,

School of Com is proposing a new course in Health Communication. Wanted to run it by you and other faculty to make sure there aren't any problems with significant overlap. If it is okay, could you please send an email attesting that you see no conflict so I can forward it to the College Undergraduate Programs Committee?

Best,

Chris

Hey Phil,

Matty, Maritza, and I had a good meeting with Dr. Robb from COM yesterday. After discussing his proposed Health Communications course, we are satisfied that the areas of overlap with Sociology of Health & Illness are minimal and we don't have any further objections to the course at CUPC.

Thank you,
Will
